Dreamtime story of how the birds got their colours. Long ago in the Dreamtime, all the birds were black in colour. They did not have any bright or fancy colours on their feathers. First, a little bird was flying around looking for food. The little bird flew down to catch a big, juicy grub. When the bird flew down to the ground, it hurt itself on a

Dreamtime Story - How the Birds got their Colours by Mary ...

How The Birds Got Their Colours is an old yarn – a small thread in the vast and intricate web of The Dreaming. Growing up, it was always one of me and my sisters' favourites. How the Birds Got Their Colours tells many stories, but what it impresses upon me most is the idea of identity. It is when the birds receive their splashes of colour – the pink of the Galah and the mixed palate of the Rainbow Lorikeet – that they finally become themselves.

Many years ago... many, many years ago... birds weren't what they are today. They were featherless, naked little animals without wings. They were quite a disturbing sight. In those days... many, many years ago there was a little town known as "The Place Where the Trees Stand Still", and that's exactly the kind of town it was. Trees had no reason to move, since there was no wind to sway their leaves. Music didn't exist either. Since birds didn't sing, no one had been given the idea to make music. The only noise heard was the ruckus the animals made each time they saw a bird. Why? Because birds were the ugliest animals in this place where the trees stood still.

Swallow and starling, puffin and peregrine, blue tit and blackcap. We use these names so often that few of us ever pause to wonder about their origins. What do they mean? Where did they come from? And who created them? The words we use to name birds are some of the most lyrical and evocative in the English language. They also tell incredible stories: of epic expeditions, fierce battles between rival ornithologists, momentous historical events and touching romantic gestures. Through fascinating encounters with birds, and the rich cast of characters who came up with their names, in Mrs Moreau's Warbler Stephen Moss takes us on a remarkable journey through time. From when humans and birds first shared the earth to our fraught present-day coexistence, Moss shows how these names reveal as much about ourselves and our relationship with the natural world as about the creatures they describe.

"An Aboriginal story'.

Thirty-three authentic, unaltered Aboriginal stories are brought to you by Aboriginal storyteller custodians. Unlike other compilations, these stories are presented with approval from Aboriginal elders in an effort to help foster a better understanding of the history and culture of the Aboriginal people; they are accompanied by a historical overview and other background information about Australia's oldest still-existing culture.

Legends, myths, and folklore have featured birds for ages. Because birds fly, in many cultures, birds are associated with the gods or with heaven, if they aren't gods themselves. This book has two of these ancient tales retold in poetic form with fun, colorful illustrations. "The Kaha Bird" is a retelling of an old Tajik tale told in limericks. "How the Birds Got Their Colors" is a retelling of an Australian Aboriginal myth that explains why all of the birds have colors except one.

This book is based on a story told by George Mung Mung Lirmiyarri, of the Kija people, to Aboriginal people living in Warmun (Turkey Creek), Western Australia. The illustrations are adapted from their original paintings of the story. Hector Jandany and George Dingmarie of the Kija Language Group said, 'We have to keep this language which we got from our old people who have passed away. We don't want to lose it. The younger generation has to carry on the language that they learn from us.'
