These photographs of Peking, now known as Beijing, taken by Thomas Child in the 1870s and 1880s are a window of the old China. In May of 1870, Thomas Child was hired by the Imperial Maritime Customs Service to be a gas engineer in Peking (Beijing). The 29-year-old Englishman left behind his wife and three children to become one of roughly 100 foreigners living in the late Qing dynasty's capital, taking his camera along with him.

In 1820, China's economy was six times as large as Britain's, the largest economy in Europe — and almost 20 times the GDP of the still-fledgling United States. 4. On a per capita basis, China's GDP in 1820 reached 84% of the global average. 5. By 1870, China's per capita GDP had fallen by one third — to just 60% of the world average. 6.

The first Chinese to enter Houston were 250 men coming in 1870 to do construction work. The Daily Houston Telegraph, in January of that year, stated that 247 Chinese docked in Galveston and went onwards in the region. The 1877 Houston City Directory listed three ethnic Chinese who worked in laundries, and the 1880 United States Census, the first to count the Chinese in Houston, showed 7 Chinese residents in there.

There is very good evidence to suggest that the Chinese economy did pretty well in the 18th century. The economy was overwhelmingly agricultural and had become specialised with considerable evidence of flows of trade along the main river systems and the coast. There were also clear signs of the development of rural industries in 18th century China, such as handicraft textiles and clothing and basic metals and machinery.

Even so, a relatively large group of Chinese immigrated to the United States between the start of the California gold rush in 1849 and 1882, when federal law stopped their immigration. With the onset of hard economic times in the 1870s, European immigrants and Americans began to compete for the jobs traditionally reserved for the Chinese.

Abstract. China is an important test case for the debate about the impact of advanced capitalist countries upon less developed ones. This chapter focuses narrowly upon the issue of growth of the 'productive forces', and does not attempt any assessment of or judgement about the political, cultural or social impact of Western 'imperialism' except in so far as these affect economic growth.
